A rogue wave, a struggling swimmer -- Jillian goes to help. It could be the last thing she does... in this realm. As doctors struggle to save her, she takes her own journey, choosing to open that door and walk through to another time. She sees herself as Hotohke'e, a Native American, getting married, raising her family, then dying from disease that was unknown to her people. On her death, she passes through more doors, more lives, struggling to hide her family from the sadistic monsters who rule over the future realm; servicing her master in one way and his children in another as they, too, die. Each door reveals another skin Jillian once wore, another time she once experienced -- England and France in the time of Henry the Eighth, Germany during the second world war, and even purgatory, unwillingly doing the will of a supreme commander. Will she linger too long at one of these lives, or is she off to find a new one to live?
