Sometimes going around the whole world doesn't require you to leave the bed...

Sara Harper has led a very interesting life traveling with her parents around the world helping remote villagers with health care and education. However, now that she is grown up, she just wants to be home and live a normal life. She agrees to go on one last trip to Africa with her parents before she starts college in the spring.

Meanwhile, Harry Freeman, a Sargent in the United States Army, has pushed his limits too far and is sent off to Africa to assist the Harper family with their charity work as punishment. Harry is not happy with this new assignment and fully expects to hate every minute of his time in Africa.

Living with the Nguntu tribe of Central Africa, Sara and Harry find plenty of time to bond and eventually become very attached to each other. What started out as a one night stand quickly begins to evolve into something deeper and more meaningful than either of them could have predicted. When the Nguntu tribe is attacked by the more advanced and aggressive neighboring tribe, Harry must decide how much he is willing to risk to save Sara.

One trip into Africa will change the lives of these two people in ways that they never could have predicted...
