You say "casting couch" like it's a bad thing...

It's 1961 and back home in Racine, Angie Miller was a beauty queen, but in New York City, it seems like every girl is a model. Naïve Angie is willing to do what it takes to stand out from the crowd and book a campaign at the prestigious McMillan & Napier Advertising firm. The handsome Doctor O'Brien takes an interest in having Angie model his new vibrating women's massager. To get just the right look for the print campaign, Angie is going to have to disrobe and demonstrate the product in front of a roomful of ad men! It takes more than a pretty smile to get this modeling job.
